WINDING ABOUT PIONEER FATHS

Emigration Canyon Railroad An Inlet to a Beautiful Wonderland.

IT WILL OPERATE THIS WEEK

Passengers Will be Carried to a Canyon That Is Rich in Tradition And Scenic Beauty.

How would you, who love in the silly summer season the dippy dips and jumpy bumps of the roller coaster railroad as it shoots for half a minute through the trestled figure eight, enjoy a ride like that for over an hour and a half?

And that is exactly what the fatigued Salt Laker will have at his disposal next summer. Climbing its way through the hills eastward from Salt Lake, running with a curve to almost every dozen rods, and starting and stopping in three different "kick backs" where it has run as far as it could at one angle and then started off with a switch and frog at another, the Immigration canyon road is lengthening its way to the Le Grand Young stone quarries.

The stone quarries are two magnifi-cent mountains of sandstone, one gray and one red, indefinitely back among willowed guiches and deeper canyons where little streams of ice cold water, running between banks thickly flanked with berry bushes, bespeak the love of summer tourists, come another season of familiarity.

THE RIDE AT SUNSET.

This is the story of a ride over the onstruction train last night, when the after-glow of sunset was on the moun-tains, and when the historic trail over which the pioneers slid and slipped down the side of Little Mountain into Immigration, was just to be discerned through the gloaming.

It was a ride which ever will be worth while, and which has its thrills, if only for that, at last after over half a century, a steel road is cutting its way back into the country of the great trail, to make those mountain walls that first indicated a promised land laying beyond in the valley, accessible for the people of a great play-loving

To get the canyons near to the people To get the canyons hear to the people has long been a growing necessity. Parleys could be reached only over miles of deep, draggy sand. The road to Big Cottonwood was so poor it was a matter of bravery to dare it. Little Cottonwood was so remote that it took a day's journey to get there City Creek was pre-empted by Pat Moand hopelessly ruined by being made a gravel factory.

AN IDEAL CAMP SITE.

Therefore there was much joy in an invitation to ride through Immigration last night on the construction train of a railroad where the ties are now being laid 15 miles from the road's being laid is fines from the force the ginning at Mt. Olivet cemetary. Before this the road had seemed merely a way to reach the Inn at the mouth of the canyon, and to be attractive mostly to those who crowd about such an inn for refreshment and an evening's dancing. ning's dancing.

But when the passenger car had been left behind, and a fast team was spinning its way along the grade line, leaving mile after mile of delightful scen-ery behind, all soon to be at the disposal of the seeker after recreation merely for the stepping off of a car, it became evident what possibilities there are beyond the securing of stone for buildings, and trade for the canyon

Then when the wagon had turned in to a side canyon and reached the lower line of summits, from which loomed Salt Lake valley, the East canyon range, the Cottonwoods, with Little Cottonwood, Big Cottonwood, Neff's and Parley's walls all ranged tier upon the with the highest the farthest away. tier, with the highest the farthest away and dozens of cool arroyas running to-wards the foot of the Pioneer Little nountain trail, it was easy to populate the whole landscape with summer tents and cottages, come another summer. But alas! Another had seen the vision of the coming years, for the driver answered a question on the possibilities with the information that real estate men had been up the week before and cornered every foot of land not already owned, with the intention of selling to the summer settler, and the camping

"AERIAL CONSTRCTION."

The railroad and the wagon trail do not cut through the same gulleys to the northward, but when it seemed that a distance had been gone of half a dezen miles north from Little mountains have there leaved ahead the a dozen miles north from Little mountain's base, there loomed ahead the Red Butte canyon and environs, and here the driver announced was the sought-for terminus. A little nearer the wagons and gangs of the construction party could be located, and with half an hour's climb on foot the grade line was reached. "Aerial construction" was the term designating the particular workers encountered. They were stringing trolley and power lines, and right in front of them were blasted holes, where the quarry is to be opened, great in front of them were blasted holes, where the quarry is to be opened, great blocks of construction stone being already prepared for the freight cars, when the line shall have completed another mile of track laying.

Around the mountain, the formation held, there was another quarry in sandstone, as red as this was bluff, and to this a branch road was making its way, taking off down the mountain further.

its way, taking off down the mountain further.
So leaving Messrs. Eldredge and Howard, to whom falls the lot of figuring how much money will come to them when their leased quarry supplies stone porches for all the homes in Salt Lake, the trail that is soon to be a railroad track was taken in its course to the lower levels. A mile of twisting found the tracklayers at work, an electric locomative bending rails" for the curves immediately ahead, where Greeks bearing Oregon fir ties were followed by other Greeks spiking down the steel roadway, to the very end of which the locomotive pushed its way with a cargo of fresh ties and rails.

A ZIG-ZAG COURSE.

A ZIG-ZAG COURSE.

And then in the growing darkness, when the headlight was lit, and the throttle was pulled open that meant a start for the canyon mouth, 13 miles away, one began to feel the real power of the mountains upon him. Down Brigham's Fork the locomotive took its noiseless course, and soon stretches of track appeared, directly below, and the wonder of how the train could drop so raipldly was soon answered when it ran into the head of one guiley, doubled back at another angle into the head of another, and then zigzagged back again in a process of angle shooting that is very different from the loop-the-looping of the steam roads when encountering bad mountain tops where the road has its ending. At the foot of Little Mountain, where is swung into the main canyon, A ZIG-ZAG COURSE.

And then through a maze of willows, And then through a maze of willows, passing and re-passing the growing canyon stream, the engine passed along till finally the thousands of electric lights that tell where is the city, and the glow that hovers over Bingham junction, and far beyond the faint glimmer of Saltair, told that the valley was in sight.

HINTS ON THE STATE FAIR

County Commissioners Throughout Utah Regarding Exposition.

Secy. Ensign of the State Fair association has prepared a letter for circulation through the state with a view to bringing the fair more prominently before the Utah public. Copies of the same are being mailed today to all the county commissioners, as follows:

Gentlemen—The Utah State Fair association, which has for its object the promotion of the arts of domestic industry and the encouragement of the production of articles from the native elements, desires to be aided in this ements, desires to be aided in this orthy cause by the citizens and in-itutions of our blessed state. season's crop of apples. What was the result? When he came to dispose of it he got $1 a box more for his apples than did his neighbors.

We want every producer in the state to secure this advantage. There is no greater means of development and education than by observation and comparison, and we take this opportunity of soliciting your aid and co-operation to encourage and induce, if possible, the horticulturists and others of your county to be fully, thereby creditably, represented at our coming state fair, which will be held from Oct. 5 to 10, Inclusive.

Any efforts that you may put forth will be greatly appreciated.
